

PROPOSED MEMORIAL MONUMENT TO THE PATRIOTIC WOMEN OF AMERICA

Among all the attractive features which a city presents its statues and monuments are among the most conspicuous. General, statesmen, and men prominent in many walks of life are immortalized in stone, and posterity is ever reminded of the great deeds of their warrior forefathers. But it has been left to Mr. W. Clark Noble, a sculptor, to be the first to give tribute to the American woman—the woman who from the time this country first asserted its right to independence has sent father, husband, brother, and borne and nursed, of the wife who gives her husband, of the sister who says "Godspeed" to her brother, of the betrothed who sacrifices her lover.

"We have strongly felt hitherto to mark our indebtedness to the woman of our wars—to those whose homes were left unto them desolate, who yielded more than life, and many of whom, in the hospitals and the very battlefields, bound up the wounds of their loved ones or nursed them through the long months of fever and pain.

"The night work which they did for their brethren, and to the glory of our mingles with another, and fresh felicities constantly discover themselves.

"The entire design may be grasped at a glance, yet the revelation of fresh particulars is endless. The architectural principles of beauty and of sacrifice are wedded here, even as the monument itself spiritually figures these human attributes. It stands before us severe and sweet, simple and complex, a pure delight to the eye, a solemn sermon to the heart—a sermon and a song.

"The sculpture which enriches the design is worthy of the architecture, and as necessary to its significance as is the

and sweetheart away to uphold the honor of that country, and who, in so doing, has performed the greatest act of heroism the world can ever know. Mr. Noble proposed that a monument be built as an everlasting tribute to the heroism of the American woman, and his suggestion has won hearty endorsement wherever it has been made known.

The original plan was to have a bill proposed in Congress for an appropriation, but that has been abandoned, and it will be left to the women of today to collect the funds for the erection of the monument. The chain-letter system will be inaugurated, and, in accordance with the plan proposed by Mr. Noble and with the miniature model which he has just completed, the monument will cost nearly $2,000,000. It is thought that little time will be consumed in getting the amount.

Mr. Noble's interest in a memorial to the heroic American woman came fittingly, in that his great-grandfather fought in the War of the Revolution, while his grandfather participated in that of 1812, his father took part in the civil war, and Mr. Noble himself went through the Cuban campaign. This hereditary fondness for martial life has left its impress upon the American woman as well, and from his own services Mr. Noble is capable of realizing their beautiful resignation, and justly fitted to suggest a means whereby coming generations may know and understand that all the glory of war does not necessarily go to those who carried the guns.

Approval of the Plan.

Julian Hawthorne, the eminent writer, when approached on the subject, became enthusiastic at the prospect. He said: "The soldiers who fought in our wars have been remembered with honor and love by their countrymen, for in nearly every city and town of the United States stands a shaft or a statue to commemorate their deeds and sacrifices. But these were developed another kind of heroism, that which displayed itself on the field of battle. It was a quiet, unobtrusive heroism, yet not less sublime than that of those who fought and fell. It was the heroism of the mother who surrenders to his country the son whom she common humanity, has never yet received substantial recognition. Not that gratitude, reverence, and love were lacking in our hearts; but no one has yet come forward to symbolize these feelings in some fitting and enduring form of majesty and beauty. They have been left to find their reward in the consciousness of lofty duty nobly done. But though it be true that God alone can fully requite them for their services, we must at least prove to the world that we felt our obligations. We can at least do for them as much as we did for our soldiers. We can erect to their honor some mighty monument of bronze and stone, which shall announce to remote posterity that America knew the worth of her daughters.

"During the generation which has passed since the civil war our nation has advanced in power and civilization beyond the dreams of its founders; the national mind has broadened, and its heart grown deeper. We are better able now than before to realize what our women have done for us, and are still doing, and to understand the necessity of a monument to commemorate it."

The monument, whose design is now completed, is majestic in design, superb in art, and sublime in sentiment, representing the homage of man to the loftiest virtues of the human soul, inspired therein by the Creator, and imaging of His perfection.

Majesty of the Conception.

A work of art can never be described, since it is its own speech and language; written words can but suggest an outline which creative imagination may fill out. The general idea is described as follows:

"The substance of Clark Noble's design is a vast triumphal arch. Based upon a broad oval sweep of multitudinous steps, it lifts its beautiful proportions to height above height of stately symmetry. Its architectural features are adorned with lovely ornament, yet so pure and reserved that the main structural lines stand forth clear and flawless in their vertical and horizontal integrity. No charm of form or contour proper to the builder's art is wanting here. Keen angle of gable, airy sweep of arch, slender spruce of column, the calm security of eaves and frieze, the massive endurance of solid structure and pier—all these elements unite to form the harmony of the whole. Nobility of mass and chasteness of detail alike fill and satisfy the eye. One merit blossom to the plant or the word to the thought. The human soul to the structure becomes visible and definite in these gracious groups, which transfigure it out of mere form into life, and touch with immortality its earthly substance. Each group and figure, in its place and degree, tells its part in the story of the whole. The great arch is closed on either side with a bronze panel, whence emerges, from lowest relief above to the full round below, a winding procession of noble and graceful forms. Here is portrayed the spirit of the people descending to lay offerings on the woman's altar, while the opposite design shows the heavenly host issuing forth to welcome the souls of the dying soldiers.

Some Symbolic Features.

"On a pedestal, structurally separated from the main design, yet organically united with it, death scatters poppies over the fallen hero, while woman ministers to him. At the answering point on the other side of the ascent Columbia joins hands of reconciled enemies; other groups beneath the gabled ends of the building show mother and daughter sending forth their men to battle, and again, victory bringing to the bereaved ones the sword and the palm. Tall pillars of victory guard the approaches here, and there the sphinx mystic symbol of mortal life broods over relief and secret.

"Surmounting all, relieved against the blue heaven, a cluster of splendid figures present woman glorified. Rising majestic from her throne, she greets war and peace, literature and art, science and industry, who approach to lay their homage at her feet. Above her head hover two angels with ever-arching wings, and beside her stand two welcoming genii.

The Harmonious Whole.

"Within the arch is a gorgeous hall of memories and records of American woman's achievements and honors in all ages, rich with precious marbles and exquisite ornaments; without, the broad surrounding spaces are diversified with mountains and flower-beds."

This is the memorial for the erection of which the American people are asked to do their part, to incarnate in granite and bronze this mighty and magnificent conception. The vision of the artist has been so clear that now it remains for every patriotic heart to contribute to render it an everlasting and glorious reality.

Smiling Nat Orth had things done to his delivery yesterday afternoon by the Athletics from St. Louis. On top of allowing them to make too free connections with his delivery, he made a bad break in yesterday's game, which, coupled with Wolverton's stunt in the error-making line, boosted the visitors up one notch above the Senators on the ladder which each team is endeavoring to climb in order to clinch the pennant. Another thing which helped materially in winning the game was the home run swat of Seybold in the sixth inning, when three men were on the base. This was indeed a heart-rending sight, and for once that old accustomed smile chased itself from Nat's countenance, but was back again when he got his elusive ones near the corners of the plate and compelled the batters to knock them where they could be handled.

The Loftus bunch started off well by getting a run in the initial inning, but could not disturb the whitewash on the plate in any other inning except the fourth, when they got a brace of runs. After that inning they did not know that such a thing as the home plate existed. Despite the fact that the locals lost, the game was an ideal one, and there were many brilliant features, among them being the quick fielding done by those two cross men and a couple of others from St. Louis. Coughlin and Ely also chased after everything hotfoot, and landed almost every one they started after. The Quakers took three out of the four games, but Tom Loftus declares that he will give them a dose of their own medicine today and the other days that the Senators have games to play in Philadelphia.

BASEBALL GOSSIP.

Seven ex-National League players will in all probability participate in today's game in Philadelphia between the Washington team and the Athletics. Among them are DeLoach, Wolverton and Orth, of the Senatorial team. It is also expected that Lofy, Ely and Bernhard will occupy their old positions.

The American League teams are bunched up considerably at present. Two teams have Washington tied for fourth place, and Philadelphia is pressing Chicago hard for second, having the same percentage as the White Sox.

The local magnates are well pleased with the crowds that the team drew during the opening of the season. If the attendance is as good during the remainder of the season they will be called upon to declare a dividend to the stockholders before the season is over.

Keister walloped three long hits yesterday. One of them allowed him to go to second without much effort. He is batting them out in great style, and will be among the top notchers soon.

Coughlin ambled around second base as spryly as a two-year-old yesterday, and accepted all of his chances in fine style.

That home run wallop of Seybold's was a perfect beauty. He got a long swing at the sphere, and when it floated over the plate he waded in on the nose and over left field fence. At the time he made this long-distance swat three men wearing Philadelphia uniforms were on the bases and romped home on the hit.

"I congratulate the National League and the baseball public in securing Power as an umpire," said Umpire Cantillon when told of the local man's appointment yesterday. "Another square man; one who will not take a bluff, has been added to complete our family circle."

This is Keister's eleventh year in baseball. In the ten years he has already played he was a member of a championship team six times. He played on the Birmingham team in 1892, when it won the championship of its league. He played on the Baltimore team in the three years that that club won the championship and on the Brooklyn team in its two years of championship.

"There is no chance of their lasting when they do not live up to their own rules," said Mr. Hickey. "They have blacklisted our players, and are yet offering them more money to jump from us to them. Of what use is the National Association, if it is not carrying out the rules that it laid down, as it said, for its own protection?"

"As far as Stallings personally is concerned, I don't doubt he would hire a whole team of contract jumpers. Before we had completed arrangements for our new circuit Stallings applied for the Louisville franchise. He said he did not have the $2,000 and could not raise it at that time, so he did not get it. But he is offering players $400 a month, with a $300 bonus, a total of about $2,300 to the player for the season. No minor league can pay on and Stallings knows it, but it shows the extent the National Association will go to to disrupt us. By doing so it will disrupt itself. There is one thing you must do in baseball, and that is live up to any rule you lay down. If you can't do that withdraw the rule, but while it lasts it must be lived up to."

Catcher Bowerman says Winnie Mercer made Mathewson what he is today. Winnie has a good thinker, and he is able to teach a good many of them valuable pointers.

Manager Shettsline thinks that Cuba or South America will be the proper place for spring training next year, and if it snows there he will have a greenhouse built at the Philadelphia ball park.

Herman Long is now playing his thirteenth year with Boston, and he is fielding just as brilliantly as at any time in his career.

James Ryan, late of St. Paul, and Blue Island Avenue, registered his two hits yesterday. James may be ancient, but he certainly can punch.—St. Paul Dispatch.

The Worcester baseball club of the Eastern League wired Homer Smoot, now playing with the St. Louis National League, to report to the Worcester club before May 1. A message was sent to Frank De Haas Robinson, president of the St. Louis club, informing him of the telegram to Smoot, and threatening the St. Louis club with suit in case the player is not returned. Smoot played with the Worcester team last season, under a two years' contract, but the outfielder deserted for St. Louis this spring. This is the first offer that has been made by any minor league club to secure a deserter from a major league team.

Tommy Dowd will manage the new Johnstown club of the New York League.

Hallman, the Breter's leftfielder, is a pretty fast man considering his size. He's not much when it comes to stealing bases, but few fielders can gallop after flies any faster. Hallman is a nephew of the Hallman that is with the Philadelphia National League team.

Jack Chesbro has a protegee mascot in Edward Bernhardt, a diminutive youngster, who appears in full pirate regalia. He is not much bigger than a small "stein."

Charlie Zimme is the only member of the famous Spiders of '89 now in fast company. Settlefield and O'Brien are dead; McKean is with Rochester; Tebeau, Snyder, Stricker, Radford, Twitchell, Beatin, Easley, and Gruber have retired; Fassz and Gilke are in the minors, and McAlister is manager of the Brown.

There is one great peculiarity about St. Louis baseball—a ball into the crowd means "good-by ball." It never comes back, and the club never attempts to coax it from the capacious pocket of the fan who grabbed it. In two games played by the Americans about thirty balls were used.

Manager Tom Loftus says that he will give $50 to anybody who will prove that he has ever been with the Baltimore team of the Boston Nationals. "On the other hand," said Tom, "I told Demott that we would not take him while he was under contract to the Boston National League club."—Boston Herald.

For quick scientific work with the stick the left-handed batter is usually the superior, as in batting. A matter of a step or two is often all that is between the runner and the ball at first, and the left-handed man gains the advantage of being across the plate at the start.—Chicago News.

BEAUTIFUL GIRL SUES NEW ORLEANS MEN

They Used Picture of Her for Advertising.

NEW ORLEANS, May 2.—Miss Mamie Connolly, the prettiest shopgirl in New Orleans, appeared in the civil district court yesterday as plaintiff in a suit for $10,000 damages against Frank B. Moore, a photographer, and A. R. Blakely, manager of the St. Charles Hotel, and the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

The basis of her suit is the alleged unauthorized use of her photograph, which had been furnished by Moore, in advertising matter issued by the hotel and railroad company.

Moore's defense is intended to disarm wrath. He states that when application was made for the photograph of a "typical Creole girl" he selected that of Miss Connolly because it was the prettiest he knew anything about.

He furthermore claims he had no idea she would object.

When Miss Connolly walked into court she was stunsily dressed, and created a sensation by her beauty.

"PEACE ON EARTH" FOR TWO DOLLARS

A conscience-stricken fourth-class country ex-postmaster, hailing from the State of Illinois, could not find "peace on earth," as he expressed himself in a letter to the First Assistant Postmaster General, until he had made restitution for the amount of $2, to which extent the conscience-stricken ex-postmaster had tampered with postage stamps while he held his position.

The money was received this morning by the First Assistant Postmaster General with the request to turn it over to the "conscience fund."
